A place to call home:

talking about devolution

Greystanes Children's Home in Leura, NSW was a large residential centre for children and young adults with disabilities and complex health care needs. In the late 1990's a decision was made to close the institution and support its residents to live in the community. This is the story of devolution: one of the most important social policy initiatives taking place in modern Australian society.

Introduced by Julie McCrossin (Broadcaster - ABC's Life Matters, Good News Week) this DVD records the journeys of some of the Greystanes residents, families and staff as they look back on their life changing experience. Other parents whose adult children still reside in institutions also share their hopes and fears of a future life in the community. Ms Jan Daisley, a leading advocate for people with disabilities, provides a personal insight into institutional care and her quest to find her own "place to call home".

We hope the DVD, with the included resources, will assist you when discussing devolution and its critical role in enabling a person with a disability to live a full life in their community.

The Facilitator's Guide included on the DVD provides learning support materials for discussing devolution with community groups, families, service providers or students.
